

News

UK: Middlesex University opens TAL fashion studios.

Petah Marian

216 words

13 February 2012

Just-Style

JUSTY

English

© 2012 Aroq Limited. All rights reserved

Middlesex University has named its fashion studios after TAL Apparel in recognition of the long-standing support the company has given the university.

It said today (13 February) that the facilities are part of the university's recently opened GBP80m Grove Centre for creative courses, with the studios named in recognition of TAL Apparel chairman Richard Lee's support to young fashion designers and his achievements in the industry.

Through his relationship with the university, Lee has championed and supported a number of education projects and initiatives, including sponsoring a student from Hong Kong to study at Middlesex University each year.

"We are immensely proud to be connected with a group as important as TAL. They have huge interests with fashion and textiles which is a really strong area at Middlesex so it's very exciting for us to have the connection and to benefit from their support and generosity. In a global fashion world it's highly relevant to the thrust of fashion at Middlesex and great for our students," said Middlesex University director of fashion courses Gillian Charles.

This article was originally published on just-style.com on 13 February 2012. For authoritative and timely style business information visit <http://www.just-style.com>.

Document JUSTY00020120213e82d0005m